Sacramento Market Update

Sacramento Colocation Supply, Take-Up and Contracted Capacity

Emergence of Sacramento as an edge market

- Beginning to see renewed development activity
- Increasingly positioned as an alternative to Silicon Valley, supported by proximity to major hubs like Silicon Valley and Reno
- Well-positioned to capture spillover demand as core markets approach saturation

Demand spillover from Silicon Valley and AI workloads

- Demand is primarily driven by capacity constraints in Silicon Valley, alongside growing requirements from AI and high-performance computing workloads
- Strong fiber connectivity further supports its attractiveness as an extension market. Vacancy rates of around 5% indicate a relatively tight market, reflecting steady absorption

Wholesale and hyperscale pricing trend

- Market rates range from US$125/kW/month to US$175/kW/month
- Expected to see strong rental growth, driven by rising demand and broader national rental growth of 6% – 12% year-on-year, which are expected to exert upward pressure in the near term

Northern Virginia Market Update

Northern Virginia Colocation Supply, Take-Up and Contracted Capacity

Sustained expansion amid emerging geographic diversification

- Total supply increased by 664MW from Jan to Mar 2026, driven by large-scale developments in Loudoun and Prince William Counties, led by major operators
- Northern Virginia remains the dominant near-term supply centre. Development activities are gradually extending beyond core hubs into regions such as Southern Virginia and Botetourt County, reflecting early geographic diversification amid land and power constraints in established clusters

Evolving policy and development constraints

- Mounting policy and community-related challenges are impacting development activity. Community opposition has led to the withdrawal of certain large-scale projects. Proposed changes to Virginia's tax incentive framework, including shorter eligibility periods and stricter environmental requirements, introduce additional uncertainty, which may weigh on future supply growth, project viability and timelines

Continued hyperscaler-led leasing activity

- Recent leasing activity remains concentrated among large cloud providers, including new commitments at campuses in Loudoun and Prince William Counties

Wholesale and hyperscale pricing trend

- Market rates range from US$130/kW/month to US$235/kW/month
- Expected to see moderate, gradual rental growth, driven by strong demand alongside rising power and land costs in a supply-constrained environment

Vienna Market Update

Vienna Colocation Supply, Take-Up and Contracted Capacity

Constrained supply growth in a high-cost market

- Supply expansion remains limited, with only incremental capacity additions coming online
- Broader market growth remains constrained by persistent high land, power and construction costs, which act as key barriers to new development
- Market is likely to see only phased, cautious expansion rather than large-scale capacity additions in the near term

Stable market conditions

- Demand has remained largely stable from Jan to Mar 2026, reflecting a balanced market environment
- Vacancy rates of approximately 8% indicate a market that is broadly in equilibrium for its size
- Vacancy rates across European primary and secondary markets are projected to decline further, reaching an all-time low of 6.5% by end-2026⁽²⁾

Wholesale and hyperscale pricing trend

- Market rates range from €95/kW/month to €120/kW/month
- Expected to see gradual rental growth driven by external factors such as inflation and rising energy costs

(2) CBRE, "2026 European Real Estate Market Outlook", January 2026.

Singapore Market Update

Singapore Colocation Supply, Take-Up and Contracted Capacity

Policy-constrained supply growth

- Supply expansion remains tightly controlled, with limited new capacity coming online
- The DC-CFA framework continues to govern new developments, constraining near-term growth despite ongoing construction from previously awarded capacity
- While DC-CFA2 is expected to introduce additional capacity, its impact is likely to materialise only in the medium term, reinforcing a structurally supply-constrained market

Demand outpace available capacity

- Demand remains robust but is increasingly constrained by limited supply, with most pipeline capacity already pre-committed ahead of delivery
- Absence of new contracts from Jan to Mar 2026 reflects supply constraints rather than weakening demand, underscoring a persistent imbalance, with latent demand continuing to exceed accessible capacity

Wholesale and hyperscale pricing trend

- Market rates range from S$380/kW/month to S$450/kW/month
- Moderate rental growth is expected, supported by sustained demand alongside continued tight supply conditions
