

said It commissioned 18 ships in 2016, including missile destroyers, frigates and guided missile frigates, according to state media. Still, the PLA Navy significantly lags the United States, which operates 10 aircraft carriers to China's one, the Soviet-era Liaoning.

Xu Guangyu, a retired major general in the People's Liberation Army, said China was keenly aware of the US ability to project power at sea. "It's like a marathon and we're falling behind. We need to step on the gas," Xu said.

Trump has vowed to increase the US Navy to 350 ships from the current 290 as part of "one of the 'greatest military buildups in American history,' a move aides say is needed to counter China's rise as a military power."

"We've known this is a 15 to 20 year project and every year they get closer to being a blue-water navy with global aspirations," said a US administration official, speaking on the condition of anonymity.

"What you have seen this last year and what I think you will see with the new budget is that they are moving ahead with the short-term goal of being the premier naval force in the South China Sea and the East China Sea, with the mid-term goal, of extending all the way to the Indian Ocean."

In January, China appointed new navy chief, Shen Jinlong, to lead that push. Shen has enjoyed a meteoric rise and is close to Xi, diplomatic and leadership sources say.

"The navy has gotten very lucky with Shen," said a Chinese official close to the military, speaking on condition of anonymity. "Now they know for certain their support goes all the way to the top."
