Market Outlook - Singapore

Stable and Resilient Logistics Market Fundamentals

- Leasing activities had remained stable in 1Q 2021, slightly slowing down from the strong performance in 4Q 2020.
- Trending sectors such as e-commerce, central kitchens and precision manufacturing have been contributing to strong leasing demand since the pandemic began. In 2020, despite the pandemic, leasing transactions have also expanded by 2.3%.
- There has been ongoing demand for last-mile delivery facilities, which coincide with the e-commerce boom and also stockpiling requirements as companies allocated buffer to cater to disruptions.
- With the targeted distribution of COVID-19 vaccines, Singapore's strategic location and developed IT infrastructure would make it well-positioned as a key warehousing and storage hub, and logistics properties are expected to benefit with price and rent increases in 2021. This is especially so for cold-storage facilities that can cater to the storage requirements for the temperature-controlled vaccine.

Market Outlook - Australia

Stable and Resilient Logistics Market Fundamentals

- Australia's industrial sector has continued to show resilience over the past 12 months.
- Stockpiling of food and robust sales from supermarkets has translated into substantial growth in the food warehousing and cold storage sector and this trend is expected to remain elevated into 2021.
- Growth in online sales due to COVID-19 has continued to drive demand for warehouse spaces.
- Industrial and logistics transaction volumes were up 16.6% in 2020 as compared to 2019, translating into the highest volume of Australia's industrial and logistics transactions on record. These volumes are expected to increase in 2021 with ongoing demand for industrial and logistics assets to continue drive both trading volumes and values.
