With the lockdowns enforced globally across numerous countries and territories to contain the virus, oil prices have plummeted.

In March 2020, oil prices plunged to multi-year lows as tensions between Russia and Saudi Arabia escalated, sparking a price war. A sell-off in crude ensued, when OPEC failed to make a deal on oil production cuts with its allies causing Saudi Arabia to cut its oil prices and ramp up production.

In April 2020, it was reported that amid forecasts for demand during the pandemic, the benchmark price for Brent crude oil dropped by more than 5% to approximately $28 per barrel. Concurrently, West Texas Intermediate (WTI) prices plunged to 18-year lows of approximately $19 per barrel after the quickest rise in surplus oil supplies in history. With these plummeting oil prices, the OPEC cartel agreed with its allies to cut production of up to 20 million barrels per day in May 2020.

The International Energy Agency (IEA) warned that the biggest production cuts in history would fail to offset the deepest fall in demand in 25 years. This has highlighted fears among oil traders that the OPEC deal would prove to be "too little, too late". The IEA has stated, that even assuming travel restrictions are eased in the second half of 2020, it expects that the global oil demand in 2020 would fall further. The collapse in oil demand has left the global market oversupplied with enough crude to overwhelm storage facilities for some time.

To protect balance sheets and preserve cash, oil and gas companies have gone into survival mode by reducing forecast expenditure to weather the impact of the pandemic and oil market volatility. As a result, capital expenditure cuts have been announced. Significant capital reductions are being seen in upstream operations, particularly for global exploration budgets and unsanctioned developments.

Globally, Rystad Energy estimates a further 15% decrease in the drilling and exploration segments for 2020 and the cuts in field development spending will have a knock-on effect to oil field service providers.

Whilst the Group continues to focus on our core business lines in securing our vessels utilization rates throughout 2020, the Group has already taken painful but necessary measures to lessen the impact of the pandemic on our business by minimising the hire of third party vessel charters and implementing further measures to reduce our workforce.

For the Group to sustain itself, our focused priorities are to preserve the health of all our people, ensure business continuity and to reduce costs. Cutting business spending while remaining competitive and operationally efficient will help the Group to weather the current instability.

In our offshore drilling joint venture with Seadrill Ltd. under Asia Offshore Drilling Limited ("AOD"), the Group's three high specification jack-up drilling rigs continue to operate optimally in the Middle East with near full utilization during the first quarter of 2020. All three rigs have been working for the same customer in the same location since 2013 and have had their contracts continually renewed on a back-to-back basis to date. The combination of AOD's rigs being of the same design and specification and working for the same customer in the same location on an uninterrupted basis has allowed AOD to benefit from operational efficiency and economies of scale.

At present, the current services contract for 'AOD I' expires in June 2022, 'AOD III' expires in December 2022 and 'AOD II' expires in April 2023. Due to the recent crude oil price movements, the offshore drilling sector has become susceptible to customers potentially requesting contractors to reduce prices, options not being exercised, delays in sanctioning of projects, possible suspensions, cancellations and early termination of contracts and rigs coming off contract and going into cold stack. Based on the experience in previous downturns and the recent news related to other jack-up rigs over the past few weeks, there can be no assurance that the existing contracts secured by AOD's rigs shall continue until expiry of their terms and/or that the prevailing day rates secured for them will not be reduced.

In this present climate, the jack-up market remains a challenging one and competition remains fierce. During this time, AOD's focus shall continue to be on using commercial best efforts to retain gainful employment for all three rigs with its existing customer into the long term and to maintain the operations of all rigs at optimal levels.
